RETRACING THE PAST OF SAIGON

Discover a meaningful journey through Saigon’s layered past, where historic landmarks invite quiet reflection on a city shaped by memory, resilience, and transformation.

Begin with a visit to the memorial shrine outside the US Consulate, followed by an outside view of the former CIA building, remembered as one of the final evacuation sites in 1975. From there, continue to the rooftop café of the iconic Rex Hotel, where a refreshing drink and sweeping views of downtown Saigon set the scene for stories of the hotel’s place in the city’s wartime history.

The journey continues at the Reunification Palace, once the presidential residence and seat of government, now preserved as one of Ho Chi Minh City’s most significant historical landmarks. Through a guided visit, gain a deeper understanding of the events and lives connected to this remarkable site.

Next, visit the former residence of Henry Cabot Lodge Jr., US Ambassador to South

Vietnam in the early 1960s. Here, pause over a cold drink and watch a short documentary that offers further context on Saigon during a defining period of change.

The tour then leads to a hidden weapons chamber once used during the war, before concluding with a late lunch at the historic Pho Binh Restaurant. Known for its connection to the 1968 Tet Offensive, the restaurant also features an upstairs photo collection that offers a poignant glimpse into the city’s past.

Return to Park Hyatt Saigon with a deeper appreciation for the many stories that have shaped Saigon – a city where history continues to live quietly within its streets, buildings, and everyday rhythms.

The experience concludes at the War Remnants Museum, where a guided visit provides a deeper understanding of the Vietnam War and its lasting impact. Through photographs, artifacts, and personal accounts, the museum presents a powerful and sobering perspective on the realities of conflict.
