Gastronomic Recommendations

*Andalusian gastronomy has directly inherited the traditional cuisine of the former Al-Andalus.
Olive oil is the key ingredient in most of its recipes, starting with the best known: gazpacho.*

Meat stews, vegetable and bean soups, cold cuts and fried and stewed fish are the mainstays of the varied Andalusian gastronomy, to which a wide variety of fruits and sweets can be added.

In the region's confectionery there are two powerful signs of identity: the Arab influence, which can be seen in the ingredients used, and the artisanal preparation, which originated in convents and religious congregations. Thus, the influence in the names still used today, such as cabello de ángel "angel's hair", suspiros de monja "nun's sighs", huesos de santo "saint's bones" or tocino de cielo "heaven's bacon".
