A Champagne winemaker's goal is to achieve complexity, and the most desirable notes of brioche and toasted bread. Refreshing acidity is balanced by a secret sweet recipe call "liqueur d'expédition". Made in the traditional method, as is Franciacorta, this is Italy vs France's greatest competition.

Schioppettino

Schioppettino is a dark-skinned grape variety native to Friuli-Venezia Giulia in the far northeastern corner of Italy. Having declined in plantings massively in the late 19th and 20th Centuries, it was saved from extinction in the 1970s, and is now regaining the respect and recognition it once enjoyed. Most Schioppettino wines are medium-bodied, deeply-colored, aromatic on the nose and spicy to the palate.

Nebbiolo

Native to Valtellina Valley, Lombardia, Nebbiolo is thought to derive its name from the Piedmontese dialect 'nebia', meaning "fog"; it's considered to be a "terroir-expressive" variety, in that it picks up more of the earth, soil, and climate characteristics. It is also an old grape, first being referenced as far back as the 1st Century! Salute

Barolo - Dott. Giuseppe Capellano

A legend in Barolo and among artisanal growers throughout Italy Cappellano was one of the last of the region's great traditionalist winemakers and he was one of Barolo's most compelling personalities. In 1983 he banished all journalists from his cellar, unless they agreed to review his wines without scores. (He saw ratings as divisive among growers.) And he may have been the only person who, during his lifetime, made a Barolo from ungrafted vines.

Cappellano made fewer than 800 cases of Barolo per year. His tiny production quickly disappeared into collectors' cellars in Italy, Switzerland and Germany. As Antonio Galloni once wrote, "Cappellano's vines are impossibly hard to find, even in neighboring Alba."

Classic Winemaking

The Barolos that Cappellano made are classic "old-style" wines, marked by a haunting scent of dried roses and a hint of truffle. He made two Barolos, both from the mythic Gabutti vineyard on Serralunga's best slope.

Two-thirds of his Barolo production was Barolo "Rupestris," from a parcel planted on grafted rootstock in the 1940s.

1998	Cappellano Barolo Rupestris	1890
2001	Cappellano Barolo Rupestris	1795
2003	Cappellano Barolo Rupestris	1750
2007	Cappellano Barolo Rupestris	1600

His other Barolo was the mythic "Piè Franco," from a parcel planted on its own roots with Nebbiolo's "Michel" clone in 1989. The ethereal delicacy of this great wine made Cappellano wonder if this is what Barolo tasted like before Phylloxera.

2003	Cappellano Barolo Piè Franco	3650
2005	Cappellano Barolo Piè Franco	3400
2007	Cappellano Barolo Piè Franco	3000

He also continued his family's tradition of making a small amount of their legendary elixir, Barolo Chinato, an infusion of Barolo with quinine bark, clove, wormwood and cinnamon and a small amount of cane sugar.
